Dr. Quinn Long, director of Shaw Nature Reserve, first visited Central America at the age of ten on a Missouri Botanical Garden trip to Belize and Guatemala. This experience incited a life-long interest in conservation, both temperate and tropical. As an alumnus of the Organization for Tropical Studies graduate program in tropical ecology, he subsequently worked with education and conservation programs in Costa Rican cloud forests. Having visited Costa Rica for work and travel over the past two decades, Dr. Long is well versed in the culture, language, and natural history of this beautiful and biodiverse nation. As a raft guide for three years in Colorado, Dr. Quinn became acquainted with a preeminent rafting company in Costa Rica and found himself guiding white water trips on the Sarapiquí River at age 19.

Located on the Caribbean Coast, this remote national park (accessible only by boat or airplane) is one of Costa Rica's most popular ecotourism destinations. Tortuguero — which translates to “region of turtles” in Spanish — is the most important nesting site of the green sea turtle. Four of the world's eight species of green sea turtles call Tortuguero their home including the Leatherback, Olive Ridley, Loggerhead and Hawksbill turtles. With over twenty miles of coastline and over 46,000 protected acres, the park is also home to a variety of animal species including jaguars, reptiles, macaws and over 300 species of birds. Wildlife and nature is abundant in this biologically diverse park consisting of a variety of habitats including rainforest, mangrove forests, swamps, beaches and lagoons. Your lodging at the edge of the park offers environmentally friendly accommodations and a network of rainforest trails throughout the property. Here you are able to relax in comfort while being in complete harmony with nature.
